NURSE NANCY

A NOTE FROM THE PUBLISHERS

Two years ago we published a book called DOCTOR DAN THE BANDAGE MAN, which contained six real BAND-AID Adhesive Bandages. And in no time at all, Doctor DAN was taken to heart by more than two million small readers.

Soon, however, letters began pouring in, saying "How about Doctor Dan's small sister? She loves to play Nurse and Hospital!"

So we went back to Johnson & Johnson and asked if they would be willing to cooperate with us on a book about Nurse Nancy. Johnson & Johnson not only seconded our motion, they made available to us for this book millions and millions of their new BAND-AID Plastic Bandages—Strips, Patches, and Spots.

In helping us with this book, they asked that we point out that BAND-AID is Johnson & Johnson's trademark for its brand of plastic and cloth adhesive bandages, and for several other products in its line.

NANCY liked to play with dolls.

She liked to play Mother. She liked to play Teacher. And best of all, she liked to play Nurse.

She had a fine doll hospital, complete with BAND-AID Plastic Strips, Spots, and Patches and handy candy pills.

But she had no one to play with her.

Her brothers called "Nurse Nancy!" as they raced past her door. But they never had time to stop and play. They were always too busy with big boy games.

Mother stopped in at the hospital sometimes.
“Nurse Nancy,” she said, when she came one day, “now that my hurt finger is almost well, this big bandage is in my way. Can you help me?”

“I have just the thing,” said Nurse Nancy.
Down from her shelf she took a brand-new box.
And she put on Mother's finger, in place of the bandage, a brand-new small pink Plastic Strip.
“There,” she said.

"Thank you," said Mother. "That's just fine. Now, I am going to hurry to the grocery store. Can you look after the house for a few minutes?"

"Yes, I can," said Nancy proudly.

Nancy was walking back to the doll hospital when she heard a great commotion out in the back yard.

It didn't sound like just a lively baseball game. It sounded like trouble. And it was!

The boys' ball had hit a bees' nest, and angry bees were pouring out.

"Look out!" Tom shouted. "Here they come!" And the three boys came racing toward the house, with the angry bees close behind.

Nancy ran and held the door open while the boys came piling in. Then she slammed it shut on the bees.

"We're safe now," Dan panted, leaning back against the door.

But Tom was not safe. He had fallen.
“Ow! Wow! Wow!” he shouted now. For his leg was bleeding from a small, nasty cut.

“Gosh!” said Billy. “What shall we do?”
But Nancy was a nurse, so Nancy knew.
First she took a good look at the wound.

She got a clean cloth and a towel from the drawer. She dampened and soaped the cloth.
"Go and lie down, patient," she said.

Tom did, and she propped a pillow under his leg, with a clean towel over the top.
Then she washed that cut off carefully.
"It's clean now," Nancy said.

The damp cloth was nice and cool against the burning sting. Soon the hurt had stopped.

"How do you feel now?" Nancy asked.

"Much better," said Tom, and he tried to smile. But when he looked at the ugly cut, he could not quite manage a smile.

"I can fix that," said Nancy. So she opened her supply box and took out a shiny pink Plastic Strip. She covered up the cut with that.

That brand-new Plastic Strip looked so fresh and fine that even Tom could smile at it now.

When Mother came home, the boys told her all about the cut and Nurse Nancy's good care, while they had their lunch.

"I'm proud of you, dear," said Mother. And she gave Nancy a special hug and an extra cookie, too.

After lunch the boys hung around instead of hurrying back out to play.

"What do you say we play ambulance?" Billy suggested.

"Fine," said Nancy.

So they fixed up the wagon for an ambulance.

Just then, ding-a-ling, came a telephone ring.
Nurse Nancy answered.

"Hospital," she said.

"There's been an accident," she heard a voice
call. "Down at the big tree."

They all looked down there, just in time to see Billy flopping down, moaning fine big moans.

"I'll drive the ambulance," Tom cried.

"I'll be the doctor," cried Dan.

Then away they raced! Tom pulled the ambulance. Doctor Dan raced beside him, with his doctor bag. And Nurse Nancy proudly rode.

When they reached the accident, Nurse Nancy put one Plastic Spot on Billy for first aid.

Then the doctor and the ambulance man lifted him onto the ambulance, and back to the hospital they went.

Billy had such a good time playing sick, with pink and green candy pills, that the others could hardly wait for their turns.

The telephone kept ringing with ambulance calls; patients kept coming to the hospital wanting brand-new Plastic Strips, Spots, and Patches. Nurse Nancy was so busy she could scarcely think.

"Well," she said, when supper time came to end her busy day, "I'm certainly glad I'm a nurse!"
